Some helpful information about commercial hood, duct, and exhaust cleaning:

- Nearly a quarter of all restaurant fires are caused by failure to clean kitchen equipment.
- Regular cleanings are required by fire code to keep your kitchen operating safely.
- Cleaning interval requirements range from monthly to semiannually depending on the type of cooking appliances used as well as how much grease is produced. Contact your provider for assistance in determining your proper cleaning interval.
- Cleaning companies should clean all system components from the roof to the hood.
- It is a good practice for kitchen staff to visually check the hood and duct after a cleaning to ensure the work is done to your satisfaction. You should see bare metal.
- Ultimately, it is the owner's responsibility to ensure the hood system is compliant and meets all fire code requirements.
